

Moving abroad

For some footballers their aim is to go overseas and play for a team in a different country. Some may choose to go and play for one of the Italian or Spanish teams while for others it is their aim to go and play for teams in Australia, Japan or America. It is not just footballers who can choose to take a job abroad, many other jobs and professions offer people the chance to go and live in a different country.

Have you ever thought what it would be like to live away from home in a different country, where the climate is different, where people speak a different language and eat different kinds of food? What would be the good and bad points?

Imagine that as a professional footballer you were offered the chance to play for a famous overseas team. You decided to take it and have now been living abroad for the last six months. Write a letter to someone at home explaining what it is like, what the surroundings are like and the good and bad points. Do you love the food? Is the weather too hot or too cold for you or are you just simply struggling to learn a new language?

Before you start your letter, decide which country you are going to imagine that you have moved to and list what you think the good and bad points of going to live in a different country might be.

My chosen country is .....

Good points	Bad points
